Dana Sherwood Crossing the Wild Line opens at Denny Gallery on January 10, 2016

Denny Gallery is pleased to announce Crossing the Wild Line, a solo exhibition by Dana Sherwood running from January 10 to February 21, 2016.

Crossing the Wild Line is Sherwood's first solo exhibition at Denny Gallery as well as her first solo show in New York City. The exhibition highlights Sherwood's multi-disciplinary practice with a theoretical focus on the Anthropocene. "Anthropocene" is a term used to define our most recent epoch beginning when humanity started to have a significant global impact. Sherwood's practice consists of drawing, video, and sculptural installations often placed in nature as interventions to engage local wildlife. The complex relationship between humans and other animals in an increasingly homogenized ecosystem is a consistent theme in Sherwood's work.

This exhibition, Crossing the Wild Line, is focused on a central sculpture that was originally located in the far reaches of the Botanical Garden of Brasília. Field cameras documented the wildlife activity interacting with the sculpture. The piece, also titled "Crossing the Wild Line", is a food cart containing items such as cooking utensils, cook books, raw meat and fish. Food in Sherwood's work can be understood as metaphor for the way humans transform nature into culture, as described by Claude Levi Strauss, in his seminal book The Raw and the Cooked. Accompanying the sculptural piece are significant drawings and videos from Sherwood's body of work.
