Streaming by Lamp and by Fire

January 7 - February 11, 2018

Scott Anderson's process begins with a vestigial image or snippet of memory lingering in his mind. He then excavates these pre-existing images, searching for hidden possibilities and meanings within them and using them as raw material to develop new forms. The drama of his dreamy narratives take shape over time: he begins with drawing and sketches, and through the act of painting, further allows the images to become more ambiguous or transform into something the he could not have originally predicted. Anderson's process is visible in the many different kinds of mark-making in oil crayon and oil paint and in the complexity of the resulting compositional space.

The title of Anderson's exhibition of new paintings, Streaming by Lamp and by Fire, collapses three time periods- the contemporary, the modern, and the pre-modern- into one. This is analogous to the level of visual fluency, cultural literacy, and historical channeling currently required to be an art maker or viewer. Anderson's evocative painting titles, such as "Spoon-Gazing/Shoe-Gazers" tend to arrive in the middle of his process, once he has started to see how the forms will function in the final painting. They are often also poetic, playful metaphors for the act of painting.

Scott Anderson received his BFA from Kansas State University and his MFA from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, and he attended Skowhegan School of Painting and Sculpture. Streaming by Lamp and by Fire is his second exhibition with Denny Gallery, following On the Nose, a two-person show with Austin Eddy in 2016. Anderson has had recent solo exhibitions at the Nerman Museum of Contemporary Art in Kansas, Galerie Richard in Paris, and CES Gallery in Los Angeles. Anderson has participated in exhibitions at MCA Chicago, the Parrish Art Museum, The Warhol Museum, the Cranbrook Art Museum, and Kavi Gupta Gallery. His work has been featured in numerous publications including Artforum, The New York Times, The Washington Post, The Los Angeles Times, The Chicago Tribune, and New American Paintings. Anderson was the recipient of a Pollock-Krasner Foundation Grant and The William and Dorothy Yeck Award. Anderson currently lives and works in Albuquerque, New Mexico and is an Associate Professor of Painting and Drawing at University of New Mexico College of Fine Arts.

“I think it’s dishonest or troubling for a painter to not be skeptical of the internet with its speed and privileging of information over experience. But then, I like the pressure it puts on painting. Painters of the 20th century must have liked the pressure photography put on painting too. Painting is deadier than ever which is very exciting!”

Interview with Scott Anderson

By Elizabeth Denny | August 2016

Can you start by introducing the paintings you have made for the exhibition and what ideas or conditions have informed these works?

They all are modestly scaled oil paintings, and as usual, my thoughts are all over the place in terms of what gets in and informs them. I've been thinking a lot about the political landscape lately (like everybody), and how to effectively and productively not fit in (maybe bad timing for that?). I've also been thinking about the aesthetics of traveling with my four siblings with bags, blankets, toys and all in the back of a Honda Civic hatchback. Related to that, I've been thinking about my mother's decorative sensibilities. I've also been thinking about white-collar crime, the fun of uneven group shows, and the idea of the "Antiques Roadshow" as a palimpsest of shamans proclaiming the power of their totems. I doubt much of this is apparent in the work, which is ok. I don't want to be literal.

Your process is intuitive and involves excavating your forms out of materials you have built up on the surface of the painting. How do you prepare to make a painting?

The paintings typically come from drawings or collages that themselves are vestigial recordings of other images or memories that have had an impact on me. I've tried to pinpoint what the allure is of certain images or memories - what resonates or what lingers as latent material for me to access in the future. I think I've narrowed it down to visions and visuals that possess a potential to transform, exist in more than one place at once, or maybe sprout limbs and walk around, or mouths that talk back...so to speak. The process of painting for me is an action which is parallel to the lateral, incongruous tracking of how images and thoughts beget new forms/ideas. Though I start a painting with the basic notion that it will be another version of a drawing or photograph, or image imprinted upon my brain from memory, I continue with a painting by looking for ways to escape what I already know about its antecedent. I'll take the detours or hop dimensions within the metaphorical time and space of the painting's surface until they've exhausted themselves and no longer appear. Paintings sometimes happen quickly this way or they can be an overcooked mess. I try not to privilege one over the other.

Your paintings are often populated by figures and objects in a complex architectural and psychological space. This combined with your titles such as "Mall Huffers..." and "Oligarchs at an Olive Garden" suggests that there is often a story behind the paintings. What are some of the narratives you have explored in your recent work?

I'm a big fan of contradictions, oddity, delusions, and red herrings. Lately it seems my paintings revel in where those ideas intersect with formative memories.

You have been living in New Mexico for the past decade. There is a long history of artists thriving in the American southwest. Can you talk about how living in that environment, and away from art market centers, has had an impact on your work?

Seven years to be precise. In full disclosure, I moved to New Mexico to accept an academic appointment and I can't claim that it was the legacy of other artists or some sort of spiritual vortex that drew me here. Now that I've lived and worked here for a while I get it. It's hard to avoid the clichés. I'm from the Midwest and this place is so beautiful! I'm from the Midwest and this place is so weird! If a geographical location can be an oblique angle then I think the Southwest is certainly that. It absorbs and rejects aspects of traditional and popular culture in an illogical way, like a really picky Katamari Ball. And to paraphrase my favorite New Mexican legacy artist, Richard Tuttle, the landscape couldn't give a shit if you lived or died. There isn't a speck of sympathetic dust to be found (and this is a very dusty place). The city is generative in its metabolism. What is generative here is the constant maneuvering to avoid being swallowed up.

You have not met your co-exhibitor, Austin Eddy, but you know his work through the internet. Could you talk a little bit about how you use the internet and how you feel about the circulation and promotion of painters online?

The internet makes it easier to stay in touch with the centers. It's a lifeline, no doubt. But as a fan of contradictions I'll also say that I hate the internet. I'm a gen-xer and we are the last batch of folks (until we start living in caves again) who can pine for the days before the internet with any credibility. Because of the internet I became aware of Austin, which is good. If there was no internet, I still may have eventually become aware of him. Maybe that would have been better? These are the predictable thoughts of someone committed to a life of making material things. I think it's dishonest or troubling for a painter to not be skeptical of the internet with its speed and privileging of information over experience. But then, I like the pressure it puts on painting. Painters of the 20th century must have liked the pressure photography put on painting too. Painting is deader than ever which is very exciting!

You live in New Mexico so your life is kind of a mystery to me. Can you describe your studio and a typical day in your life?

I love this question! For a moment, all the anxiety I have about banishing myself to the high desert vanished because, who doesn't want to be mysterious sometimes?! Just like that, the anxiety is back...

I'm really lucky to have the studio that I do right now. I live and work in an area called La Cienega, just south of Santa Fe. The property stock out here is various but there is a lot of light agriculture mixed with cheaper rural plots. My wife and I rented the house and studio about two years ago when we moved up from Albuquerque so she could take a job in Santa Fe. The house and studio are stuccoed over, prefab steel buildings erected by the previous owner who is a sculptor. The studio is spacious, certainly by NY standards, but all of the wall space is taken up by workbenches. I had a double-sided wall on casters built along with a storage rack when we moved in. The studio gets cold in the winter but if I have a full day in there, I can fire up the beast of a double oil drum, DIY, wood burning stove. Its very romantic.

I teach two days a week during a typical academic year. Sometimes other aspects of the job suck me back in the orbit of campus in addition to those two days. I'll usually reserve a day to be domestic, work in the garden, hike, or take a day trip with Robin, my wife. Just about every other waking moment I try to be in the studio. A good full studio day starts about 9 and lasts until about 6. When I draw, I start with that, or I might start by cleaning brushes from the day before. I'll take breaks with videos from the goddamned internet or thumb through a book. I usually listen to BBC 6 radio on the goddamned internet or go old school and listen to CDs. I've recently sworn off music algorithm sites. I'm going to try to start buying music again or otherwise rely on the idiosyncrasies of human DJs. If my wife isn't working at night, we'll eat dinner together then watch some television, play cards, or read, usually while drinking hot tea.
